A. A Sports Fan's Antique Road Show

Do you have old baseball tickets, or a vintage autographed baseball? How about pennants that used to hang on your bedroom wall, a baseball card collection, old newspaper clippings? Almost anything related to sports, entertainment or politics that is a few decades old has real value. Bring a treasure to our Road Show and let Ted Taylor tell you what it may be worth. And wait till he tells you all about those Philadelphia Athletics !

Ted Taylor, MS was a columnist for the Philadelphia Daily News for 12 years. He is a baseball historian, a collector of and expert in the field of sports memorabilia, sports talk show host, entrepreneur, college professor and a long-suffering fan of all Philadelphia sports teams. In his teenage years Ted's favorite team and this city's winning-est, the A's, moved to Kansas City and he never got over it. The illustration (right) is taken from his brand new book, The Ultimate Philadelphia Athletics Reference Book, 1901-1954.

B. The Art of Looking at Art

From da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" to Braque's "Woman with Guitar" and beyond ... art has changed dramatically. The way we look at paintings, however, has remained the same. Dr. Sheldon Weintraub will be our guide, teaching the group to "see" art in new ways. In Philadelphia one is surrounded by world-class art museums, art schools, galleries as well as art programs for school children, in colleges and universities. After spending an afternoon in this class, we will be all the more eager and confident when visiting a museum or gallery

Senior Olympian, stand-up comic and podiatrist, Sheldon Weintraub is a self-described ball of fire. Now retired, he turns his humor and energy towards art. He has traveled extensively to art museums around the world and has studied art history, earning certificates from the Barnes Foundation and Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. Dr. Weintraub now travels to lecture on art history, volunteers as a docent at the Barnes Foundation, and has designed an art appreciation course that teaches medical students to really see and listen to their patients.
